(1845) and pastor of the first Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn. Manuscripts of his sermons span the years 1844 to 1891, as do essays, speeches, bible lessons, and theological notes. Correspondence contains many letters to him from clergymen, parishioners, friends, and family, often regarding the controversy caused by his publication of The Chancel and Influence of Abolitionism, the movement in the Church, and matters of the General Assembly. Men such as N.C. Burt, Howard Crosby, Cyrus Dinkon, William H. Green, James O. Murray, E.D. Prime, and Nathaniel West are representative.

"The main body of the collection consists of enormous files accumulated during the lifetime of Henry van Dyke, Jr. (1852-1933, Class of 1873), son of Henry van Dyke, Sr. Thousands of letters, often with carbons of van Dyke's replies, document the literary, religious, and political life of which he was part. Many notable names in American literature represent the extent and variety of his correspondence, such as Mark Twain. The Princeton connections are fully recorded from his early days as a student, then as Murray Professor of English Literature, and later as annual lecture-writer with letters from James McCune, John Grier Hibben, Francis L. Patton, Allan Marquand, and Woodrow Wilson. There is also a large file of correspondence written while he was minister to the Netherlands and Luxembourg at the Hague (1913-1917 and correspondence 1915-1922) reflecting his involvement with the League to Enforce Peace.

"As pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York (1883-1889), chaplain for the navy, and moderator of the Presbyterian Church's General Assembly, he became a religious leader with a far-reaching influence. He maintained correspondence with clergymen, presidents, nobility, fellow Anglers, school children, family, friends, and strangers." The collection contains many manuscripts of van Dyke's later works...as well as... interviews, sermons, speeches,..." "The papers of Paul van Dyke (1859-1953, Class of 1881), brother of Henry van Dyke Jr., contain his type manuscript for Catherine De Medicis, a few lecture notes, correspondence with Darwin G. Eaton, William Chesman, Princeton University faculty, and others and his school reports.
